The Race Car Drivers

Styled from "The Town Dump,"

by Wallace Stegner

We hunted adventure through the old, dried crackling leaves that crunched noisily under our feet, finding it in one of my dad's old half-restored cars; sitting in it we could be race car drivers. When we opened the door all the little spiders crawled out and we climbed up onto the high seats, so tempted by all those buttons that we just had to push some. Slowly, the car began to roll forward until we found the right button to make it stop, and we were so delighted that we did it again.
